

What is ISO Certification?

ISO Certification certifies that a management system, manufacturing process, service, or documentation procedure has all the requirements for standardisation and quality assurance. ISO (International Organization for Standardisation) is an independent, non-governmental, international organization that develops standards to ensure the quality, safety, and efficiency of products, services, and systems.

ISO certifications exist in many areas of industry, from energy management and social responsibility to medical devices. ISO standards are in place to ensure consistency. Each certification has separate standards and criteria and is classified numerically.
